What is 'phishing'?

"Phishing" is a type of identity theft where criminals use email to try to bait you into fake websites. Once there, you are asked to disclose confidential financial and personal information, like passwords, credit card numbers, access codes or Social Insurance Numbers. The most familiar type of phishing scam is an e-mail threatening serious consequences if you do not log in and take action immediately.

Some emails look authentic, featuring corporate logos and layouts similar to the ones used by institutions for legitimate communication. Because these emails can look so official, unsuspecting recipients may reply to them, resulting in financial losses, identity theft and other fraudulent activity.

You should never respond to or action any email that:

- Requires you to enter personal information directly into the e-mail or submit that information online.
- Threatens to close or suspend your accounts if you do not provide or verify personal information.

- Claims that your account has been compromised or that there has been fraudulent activity on your account and requests you to enter, validate or verify your account information.
- States that there are unauthorized charges on your account and requests your account information.
- Claims that the bank has lost important security information and needs you to update your information online.

Stay Alert - Preventative Measures

- Be suspicious of all unsolicited or unexpected emails you receive, even if they appear to originate from a trusted source like Scotiabank.
- Never click on a link in an email or pop-up window to go to a site. Type, or cut and paste, the URL into a new web browser window.
- Type in the Scotiabank web address yourself to ensure you are transacting with our server. You can also bookmark the URL to save time.
- Never call a number appearing on an email you suspect is fraudulent. In a new twist, phishing scams use a phony telephone number in the email. When you call, a person or an automated response asks for your personal and/or account information.
- If you do have a relationship with the company mentioned in the email, call the company on the telephone using a reputable source like your statement or the phonebook for the phone number.
- Stay current. Read and follow Safe Computing Practices on a regular basis.
